Planting bamboo along the Pampa riverside in association with the Pazhavangadi Panchayath is an excellent initiative to protect the riverbank from floods. Bamboo is known for its strong root system, which helps in stabilizing soil and preventing erosion. Additionally, bamboo can absorb a significant amount of water, making it an ideal choice for flood-prone areas. By planting bamboo along the riverside, you are creating a natural barrier that can mitigate the impact of flooding. The dense growth of bamboo can slow down the flow of water, reducing the risk of soil erosion and protecting the riverbank from being washed away. Twenty NSS Volunteers and two teachers participated in the program. Panchayath President Mr. Joseph Kuriakose inaugurated the program by planting Bamboo in the Pampa riverside at Ranni.
